Leaders Urge U.S. Regard For Jewish Demands On German Payment

Seven American Jewish leaders presented to the U.S. State Department a declaration demanding that Germany make "practical amends for the staggering material losses inflicted upon Jewry by the Hitler regime." The demand was made on the eve of the thirteenth anniversary of Nazi Germany's first great pogrom.

The delegation called on Acting Secretary of State James E. Webb with a resolution signed in New York last month at a two-day conference on Jewish claims against Germany. The statement bore the endorsement of twenty Jewish organizations in seven countries, including seven agencies in the United States.

The delegation said that the conference had represented the "overwhelming majority of organized Jewry in the free world." The group added that it also endorsed the claim that the Israeli Government had already made against Germany based on the rehabilitation in Israel of the victims of Nazi persecution.

"We demand from Germany," the group continued, "also the satisfaction of all other Jewish claims against her, including claims for restitution and indemnification by individuals, successor organizations and others, and for rehabilitation of the Jewish victims of Nazi inhumanity."

The delegation urged the State Department to regard the claims as a logical continuation of the restitution and indemnification programs the United States has supported in the past, says the New York Times.

The declaration presented to Mr. Webb stated that while there is [illegible] for the agony they inflicted [illegible] and children, [illegible] to death [illegible] inhuman device," the Germans "can and must yield the profits of their crimes and pay for the cost of rehabilitating those who managed to survive."

The declaration called attention to the September 27 statement by Chancellor Konrad Adenauer of the West German Federal Republic acknowledging that the "unspeakable crimes committed during the Nazi regime impose on the German people the obligation to make amends."

That statement, the Jewish leaders declared, "will be judged by the speed and extent of its implementation."

The delegation consisted of:

Col. Bernard Bernstein of Bnai Brith; Dr. Nahum Goldmann, chairman of the Jewish Agency for Palestine; Dr. Israel Goldstein, chairman of the Executive of the Western Hemisphere, World Jewish Congress; Adolph Held, president of the Jewish Labor Committee; Dr. Irving Miller, president of the American Jewish Congress; Seymour Rubin, Washington representative, American Jewish Committee, and Michael G. Tress, president of the American Section of the Agudath Israel World Organization.

Benjamin Ferencz, director general of the Jewish Restitution Successor Organization, accompanied the delegation.

The people of Germany must have the "real will" to make moral and material amends for war crimes committed by Nazis against Jews, Dr. Noah Baron, of London, chairman of the European Executive of the World Jewish Congress, declared at the Sabbath service at Congregation Bnai Jeshurun, 270 W. 89th Street.

Dr. Baron spoke in a symposium on "Jewish Claims Against Ger-

Warns Of Bigotry As Unity Threat

Unless church- and synagogue-goers take steps to "cleanse" America of prejudice there will soon be no nation left to reclaim, the Rev. Dr. Joseph R. Sizoo, president of New Brunswick, N. J. Theological Seminary, warned at Washington, D.C.

Preaching at the Protestant Episcopal Washington Cathedral in connection with the twenty-third annual meeting of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, Dr. Sizoo told the delegates that there was ample room in the United States for religious, political, economic and social differences.

"But while we all have the right to convert individuals to our beliefs," he declared, "we have no right to slander theirs."

Defining the "greatest single need of our time as a sense of oneness," Dr. Sizoo emphasized that the weapon most feared by Communism was a "people united."

"Unfortunately divisive forces of prejudice and ill-will have recently come to the fore," he observed, adding that "while these are abroad, our nation will never be united." In the "Magna Carta" of religion, the clergyman asserted, "there is no place for social prejudice or religious intolerance."

Dr. Sizoo made no direct mention in his sermon of the conference action when it called on Americans of all faiths to temper with calmness and deliberation their reactions to President Truman's recent proposal to send an ambassador to the Vatican.

However, as Protestant co-chairman of the Religious Organizations Commission of the conference and one of the leading supporters of the group's plea, it was clear that the minister had the President's move and the repercussions therefrom uppermost in his mind.

A brochure distributed to delegates for widespread distribution in 1952 recalled that the National Conference was founded in 1928, "the year Al Smith's candidacy for the Presidency ignited blazing bigotry."

"We have never once veered from our original objective to advance by educational means justice, amity, understanding and cooperation among Catholics, Jews and Protestants in America," it added. "We shall continue this program as our basic reason for existence."

Russia's rejection of President Truman's disarmament proposal has increased world tensions that already are at an "extremely high level," Dr. Arthur H. Compton, Chancellor of Washington University, St. Louis, and chairman of the World Brotherhood Organization, declared.

Dr. Compton, a Nobel Prize physicist and former Protestant co-chairman of the National Conference, attributed the ills of the world to "mutual suspicion" and said that the purpose of both the brotherhood group and the conference was to develop a "basis of understanding" on which such suspicions could be allayed.

Predicting a "prolonged period of high tension," he said that the supporters of the world brotherhood movement "value the welfare of others as we value our own."

"Here indeed is the basis of true democracy," Dr. Compton told the conferees. "We call it the dignity of man. To Americans it means that we believe each person should have a chance to find himself in doing his part for his community and should be respected to the extent that he makes the best of this chance. To Christians and Jews this is the meaning of man as a child of God. To men and women of good will throughout the world such brotherhood, sincerely accepted, offers the hope for a fuller freedom."

Dr. Everett R. Clinchy, president of the national conference, told a pre-convention staff meeting that a religiously motivated brotherhood offered resistance to the "scourge of anti-Semitism," brought moderation to Protestant-Roman Catholic tensions, set the stage for an "atmosphere" in which race adjustments could be equitably achieved, and paved the way for peace among nations.

"The mass of the common people are now engaged in the greatest revolution of human history," he asserted.

"Everybody everywhere has the dream of overcoming hunger with adequate food for all; conquering ignorance with schools; poverty with intelligence and machines; coping with disease in hospitals and laboratories everywhere; regenerating lives spiritually with churches and temples whose programs are concerned with the dignity and well-being of persons, all of equal worth in the sight of God."

Scenic Designer Fled Hitler For U.S.

H. A. Condell, forty-five, leading scenic designer for the New York City Opera Company, other opera companies and the theater, died in New York at St. Clare's Hospital. His home was at 265 Riverside Drive. A refugee from Germany, he had been associated with the Berlin Civic Opera and the Jewish Kulturbund Theatre, under whose auspices he had gained a reputation as a stage and costume designer.

Mr. Condell was ill for some time and did no designing for the current season, although it had been planned to have him design sets for certain of the City Opera Company's productions.

His work never failed to bring him critical acclaim. New York Herald Tribune critics hailed it as "ingenious," "expressive and musically advantageous without being at any point pretentious," and both "authentic and imaginative." His ingenuity in designing sets for the City Center stage won much praise, although Mr. Condell would explain that he simply predicated his designs on the fact that only a space ten by fifteen feet in the front center of the large stage is visible all over the house.

German-born and trained in the pre-Hitler theatre of Berlin, Mr. Condell exemplified in his work his belief that a knowledge of music is essential in attempting to create operatic backgrounds, in contrast to designing for the legitimate theatre. He received his early training with the Civic Opera in Berlin, and, when Hitler came to power, was co-founder of a non-Aryan theatre which produced the only Mozart that could be heard in the city, says the New York Herald Tribune.

He came to the U.S. in 1938. His first assignment was to design the scenery for a production of "Saint Joan," starring Luise Rainer, that played in Washington but was not brought to New York.

Mr. Condell's long association with the City Opera Company began with its first production, "La Boheme," in May 1944, and continued through last year with "Die Meistersinger," considered the company's greatest success to date. He designed sets for a variety of productions in between, including "Aida," "Faust," "The Marriage of Figaro," "Salome," and, in a lighter mood, "Pirates of Penzance."

In addition to the city company's productions, during the last theatrical season he had designed the scenery for "The Barrier," a Broadway musical play, and "Mazel Tov, Molly," a Molly Picon vehicle that played successfully downtown. He had also designed scenery for the Shoestring Opera Company and the Columbia Opera Workshop, at Columbia University. He leaves his wife, Luba, with whom he was associated in the theatre, and a son, Cary.

Editor Gives View Of Israel On Arabs

Gershon Agron, editor of The Daily Jerusalem Post, said at Washington, D. C., that the formation of the Middle East Command of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization would present three possibilities for the State of Israel: the status of a base, a buffer or a bastion. Mr. Agron is in the United States in the interests of the $500,000,000 Israel bond issue being offered to private investors.

He declined to predict which of the three possibilities would overtake Israel, explaining that "there is a certain tyranny of international developments over which small nations have no control." He added that bases usually were taken by force, buffers developed under force of circumstances, and bastions were formed by the free choice of the people concerned. Israel, he said, obviously would like to be a bastion and a spearhead of Western democracy in the Middle East.

His country would hesitate, he continued, to enter a Middle East Command based on the Arab nations of that part of the world, reports the New York Times.

Sees Grave Public Health Problem Of Sanitation In Israel Due To Influx

A grave public health problem has been created by Israel's promise that none shall be turned away from making a home there, Dr. Leo P. Rigler, Professor of Radiology at the University of Minnesota School of Medicine, asserted in Boston, Mass., in a symposium of seven experts in various fields who had been members of Unitarian Service Committee mission project this year. His assignment was with a medical teaching mission to Israel, says the New York Times.

The challenge to Israel, Dr. Rigler said, was a tremendous problem of sanitation "posed by an uninterrupted daily arrival of 900 newcomers who are gratefully accepting Israel's invitation to come and live in a land that will close its door to no one."

Responding to an appeal by Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion for funds to permit uninterrupted immigration of Jews into Israel, the United Palestine Appeal unanimously adopted a budget for the forthcoming year of $145,000,000 to finance such immigration, at a meeting in Washington, D.C.

The U. P. A. is the largest beneficiary of the United Jewish appeal, which raises money for needy Jews in Israel and elsewhere. In addition, the U. P. A. administers the spending in Israel of funds raised by Jewish organizations in Canada, Europe, South Africa, South America and elsewhere.

A corollary to the budget adoption is that it insures that the U. J. A. will conduct a major nation-wide campaign for funds in the United States in 1952. The budget was presented for adoption by Rudolf G. Sonneborn, U. P. A. national chairman, at the opening of the organization's national [illegible] said the money is needed to finance the immigration of at least 150,000 and perhaps even more than 200,000 Jews in the next twelve months, according to the New York Herald Tribune.

In line with Mr. Ben-Gurion's message to the meeting, Mr. Sonneborn warned that the people of Israel are "draining themselves to the danger point to help newcomers." Israel, he said, is engaged in a war against hunger, homelessness, inflation and fear, just as in the past it fought a war with the Arab states.

Mr. Sonneborn analyzed the manner in which the budget funds are to be used. He said $61,940,000 has been earmarked for agricultural development, including establishment of sixty-eight new settlements; absorption of immigrants and maintaining them in temporary work camps and reception centers will cost $16,800,000, and transportation will cost $11,000,000. The balance is for youth immigration and training, resettlement of orphans, establishing vocational guidance and training programs and similar projects.

Other speakers included Rep. Franklin D. Roosevelt jr., D.-Lib., N. Y., and Dr. Nahum Goldmann, co-chairman of the Jewish Agency for Palestine. Rep. Roosevelt suggested a three-point program which he said would help bring about peace and prosperity in the Middle East, the New York Herald Tribune reports.

The program included granting financial assistance for resettlement of Arab refugees from Palestine through the United Nations Palestine Refugee Commission; expansion in the Middle East of President Truman's Point 4 program [illegible]

INTERNAL SECURITY AND INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS TODAY

BY SANFORD SOLENDER, NATIONAL JEWISH WELFARE BOARD, NEW YORK

Once again the spectre of war haunts the people of America. Hardly had the echoes of World War II faded when to our dismay and consternation, the threat to peace was renewed. A world weary of fighting and yearning to devote its energies and resources to peaceful ends, to reconstruction and human betterment, is diverted again by the resort to arms.

The urge for peace is universally shared by the American people. The fate of our future lies in the achievement of peaceful solutions to present world conflicts, and we must devote ourselves unswervingly to this goal. Yet, while few wish war, even fewer deny the elementary necessity for us adequately to mobilize our resources for defence. Perhaps this position can best be summed up in this way:

First, we must strive endlessly for peace through helping to eliminate social, political, and economic want and deprivation—the soil upon which war and totalitarianism feed—throughout the world, as well as in America. Second, we must mobilize for the effective military defense of democracy, thus indicating to the world by word and deed that we will support the right of all peoples to self-determination. We must make it unequivocally clear that we will act swiftly when necessary to meet any challenge to our national security. Third, we must take all reasonable steps to safeguard our internal security against subversion, sabotage, or interference with our defense effort. Fourth, we must firmly resolve that in our efforts to achieve internal security, we shall not jeopardize our sacred and fundamental rights as a democratic people.

Whether through overzealous efforts to safeguard our security or through wilful intent to limit freedom, attitudes and practices have developed in America which threaten our traditional rights. We must harmonize our valid concern for our internal security with the preservation of the very democratic principles and practices we seek to defend.

The hazards to our democracy through the atrophy of freedom in our quest for internal security can damage our democracy fully as much as can the subversion we legitimately seek to prevent. Such a discussion as this must proceed from the assumption that the protection of our democratic way of life is a sacred responsibility demanding our greatest effort. We must extend ourselves in every conceivable way to hold the resolution of our problems in the direction of maintaining our individual rights and civil liberties.

We Jewish communal workers must face these issues as objectively as possible and with the best perspective at our command. We are challenged to extend and maintain sound democratic practices in the administration of our agencies and in our agency programs, and to promote and advance the democratic way in society as a whole.

In these comments we shall consider the implications of this problem for clients, members or groups served by Jewish communal agencies, agency programs, the social action functions of the agencies, and the concerns of the Jewish communal worker.

At the core of our services, whether they be Jewish family or children's agencies, Jewish Community Centers, Jewish vocational agencies or others, is the responsibility for dealing with people's needs. The personal anxieties and concerns with clients or members bring to us an important part of the background against which we carry out our functions. We have yet to appraise the full effect on people of the current climate of fear and restricted freedom. This is doubtless a contributory factor to the total present impact on individuals, inducing insecurity, apprehension and concern. In fully appreciating the personal needs of clients or members it is well for us to be continually aware of this.

Another principle which is basic to our Jewish communal agencies is the right of each individual to benefit from, or participate in these programs. Basic to our democratic spirit is the concept that the test of people's eligibility to share in our programs is their need and desire for these services, as well as their willingness to accept the responsibilities of participation. Political views or affiliations are foreign as requirements for such eligibility. Fortunately, this has not appeared and it is to be hoped that it will not arise. However, we must be alert to maintain sound standards for individual intake, admission, or affiliation.

The problem of internal security and individual rights affects the programs of our Jewish communal services in varying degrees. For some, the application is more direct than for others and this question has particular pertinence for group work and community organization services.

Essential to a strong and effective democracy is an enlightened, alert and active citizenry. The future of our nation may very well depend on the extent to which our people attain clarity on national and world affairs, and understanding as to the best means of defending our democracy.

There is no short cut in a free society for the educational process through which people shape their ideas and democratic convictions. This can only happen through the free exchange of ideas, the study of controversial issues or hearing of controversial public figures, and the consideration of all points of view.

Jewish communal agencies can help individuals and groups to acquire such increased social understanding. Whether in the club or forum in the Jewish Community Center, the group in the children's institution, or the program advice we give to Jewish organizations, the principles of good programming in this area should be emphasized. Free discussion is fundamental, and resistance to minority points of view must not lead to repressive measures which stifle this process which is the very essence of democracy. We must have sufficient confidence

These countries, he said, have declined to convert their individual armistice agreements with Israel into peace treaties and openly declare they are getting ready for a second round in the temporarily suspended war.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Agron said, Israel would be adverse to subscribe to the free exchange of military information which complete membership in a Middle East Command would demand.

Before the Second World War, 90 per cent of Canada's tourist revenues came from American visitors, and in the postwar period the proportion has arisen to 94 per cent. In 1950 Americans accounted for 260 million dollars of a total of 275 million dollars spent by foreign visitors to this country.

A. J. C. Leader Warns On Civil Rights Decline

Speaking on "The Status of Civil Rights in America Today" at a meeting sponsored by the American Jewish Congress Young Men's and Young Women's Division, Will Maslow, director of the American Jewish Congress Commission on Law and Social Action, charged that the United States were "witnessing a slow erosion of their civil liberties, a disintegration of traditions once believed solid as rock".

"Our civil liberties and civil rights," Mr. Maslow said, "are a seamless web; and once that web begins to unravel, who can tell whether the entire fabric will come apart? What is ironic about this panic which is sweeping the country, this mass hysteria about a political party with less than 50,000 members and ever dwindling influence, is that it is so unnecessary." The Communist Party had been dislodged from its source of power, the labour movement, without the aid of the Taft-Hartley law or any other anti-Communist legislation.

Roger Baldwin, chairman of the International League of the Rights of Man, and former director of the American Civil Liberties Union, told the meeting that civil rights in America were at dangerously low ebb. The present situation was giving cause for grave concern because "the pressures of fear for national security" had "reduced traditional freedoms of debate and dissent to the lowest point in years and are seriously compromising American leadership in world councils". As a result of fear of Communist infiltration, "although the U.S. is host to the United Nations, foreign visitors to the U.N. are under the most rigorous restrictions in the free world".

Mr. Baldwin asserted that these bars to international co-operation on the part of the strongest democracy in the world were "a measure of our lack of faith in ourselves. They are not a measure of any proved Communist danger. Furthermore, they do grievous hurt to our cause abroad where they are regarded as symptoms of an unreasoning hysteria out of line with American professions. Those who abuse our hospitality could be quickly expelled. Instead, the presence bars contradict our professions of support of the United Nations as the major factor in our foreign policy".

Haifa's attractions as an industrial center and resort are explained in a richly illustrated 20-page booklet just published by the Haifa Municipality. Free copies are available from the Economic Department of the Jewish Agency, 16 East 66 Street, New York 21, N. Y.

MARRIAGES

MANDEL-STEINBERG

The marriage of Miss Clara Steinberg, of Toronto, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Leon Steinberg, to Henry Mandel, son of Mr. and Mrs. Max Mandel, of Estevan, Saskatchewan, took place on Sunday, September 16, at half-past six o'clock, in the North End Auditorium, in Winnipeg, Man., with Rabbi H. Herson officiating. The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Jack Steinberg, of Estevan. Over her gown of white Chantilly lace and satin, the bride wore an Elizabethan coat of the same lace, made with high stand-up collar, long sleeves, and skirt, which cascaded into a petalled train. A small matching cap held her fingertip nylon illusion veil, and she carried a mother-of-pearl Bible, adorned with a white orchid and white satin streamers, caught with tiny rosebuds and stephanotis. Mrs. Norman Cowan, Braemar Avenue, Toronto, the bride's sister, was matron of honour. She wore a cornflower-blue lace cocktail-length gown, with matching halo hat, and pink lace mitts, and carried a cascade bouquet of bronze-coloured gladioli and cornflowers. Dr. Harry Brockler, of Weyburn, Sask., was best man. The ushers were: Harry Singer, Al. Braunstein, Cecil Braunstein, M. Fisher, Edward Uditsky, Martin Singer, Sol. Brownstone, and Allan Beyer. Morris Cohen, accompanied by his wife, Mrs. Cohen, at the piano, chanted traditional blessings under the canopy, and sang "Because" during the ceremony. Musical background and the wedding march were played by Jack Shapiro, violinist, and Ira Caminetsky, pianist, members of the Jewish Community Orchestra in Winnipeg. The groom's mother wore a gown of beige lace, with matching mitts, and a feathered hat, and a mauve orchid corsage. Lighted tapers, set in standards of pink and white gladioli, banked the aisle and formed the setting around the canopy. The couple left for an extended motor trip, and are now residing in Estevan, Sask.

Council Adopts Big Budget For Human Needs

The Board of Directors of the National Council of Jewish Women adopted a budget for the fiscal year to end next September 30 of $682,000, the largest sum ever appropriated for the organization's national operations, comparing with $525,000 spent in the fiscal year just ended, and in part of an over-all annual expenditure on education, community welfare, and overseas service work carried on by 240 Sections, amounting to some $2,500,000. The Council determined, despite higher operating costs all along the line, to continue the maintenance and essential growth of its program for fulfillment of human needs.

Mrs. Irving M. Engel, national president, said: "Now more than ever in the Council's resolve to further the cause of world peace, we feel that it is essential to strengthen our democracy at home and to assist needy and underprivileged communists abroad in every way possible. Our organization contributes to this strengthening process by assisting the sick, the helpless, the aged, the physically and mentally handicapped, and by a program of education and social action. "All these phases of our program," including 800 community service projects in cities and towns throughout America, will be continued through the coming year."

The $682,000 sum covers, in overseas service, a scholarship program which to date has financed the advanced studies in the United States of welfare experts from 15 underdeveloped and war devasted countries; sponsorship of the School of Education of Hebrew University in Jerusalem, and of a home for unattached girls in Paris; and administration of a "Ship-A-Box" project which sends work and play materials to children in homes, schools and orphanages all over the world.

In community service and education work it covers study and support of liberal legislation, receiving and helping to integrate new citizens within local communities; "golden age" programs of recreation and rehabilitation of old people; programs of educating the general public to mental health needs; assistance to the blind, and to other sick people to carry on complete lives; school, hospital, diagnostic clinic and convalescent home service to sick children; maintaining of toy and book lending agencies and sick loan shelves; maintaining child guidance clinics; day camps and summer camps for the underprivileged, and day nurseries for the children of working mothers, and many other projects of this kind.

The re-afforestation of Israel has become of primary importance for the development of a flourishing agricultural economy. The plan at present under way envisages the planting by the Jewish National Fund and the Government during the next ten years of 3,500,000 dunams (875,000 acres) with 230,000,000 pine, cyprus, carob, oak, pistachio, olive, eucalyptus acacia, tamarisk, poplar, willow and date palm trees. In the Negev 185,000,000 saplings are to be planted, 20,000,000 of them on 2,000,000 dunams (500,000 acres), in echelon formation around villages, fields, and gardens. These trees will protect the soil against the hot winds that dry up the moisture in the upper layers of the ground and turn the earth into sand which is then carried away by the notorious Negev sandstorms. These windbreaks can become a major factor in cultivating the barren land, and raise the yield of the area.

Undercover In The Middle East

BY ABE GOLDBERG, OF MONTREAL

The author of the sensational "Undercover" and "The Plotters" has broadened the scope of his exposes in his new volume. From the limited American scene he has ventured forth into one of the world's political cauldrons to watch and report at first-hand the upheaval in the Middle East and the birth of the State of Israel.

John Roy Carlson, the pseudonym which won for this Armenian-born American journalist international fame as a crusader against intolerance and bigotry has, like the United States, left his isolation and ventured forth (literally taking his life in his hands on numerous occasions) to see for himself what was going on in that economically and politically depressed area that stretches from Cairo to Damascus. His report, which reads as fresh as the latest news, exposes the chicanery of ambitious politicians who for selfish reasons are trying to keep the march of civilization and progress from that important sector of the world.

"Cairo To Damascus" is an important document of events preceding and following the establishment of the state of Israel as seen by a competent reporter from all sides. He was in Egypt when the Mufti and his cohorts were recruiting volunteers to chase the Jews into the Mediterranean; he was in Arab Jerusalem when the Arab Legion attacked and ransacked the city; he was in Jewish Jerusalem and witnessed the bombardment, the complete isolation of the city from the rest of Israel, and the suffering of the local population deprived of water and food. He was in Syria and Lebanon and saw how the Nazis, long after the defeat of Hitler, played an important role in the war against the Jews in Palestine.

But most of all he saw the vivid contrast between life in Jewish Palestine and in Arab countries; the struggle between a handful of people believing in their right to a democratic way of life and the feudal slavery in existence in Arab countries. Carlson is shocked at Moslem morality and goes to great lengths to emphasize it. But he is similarly startled at the intrigues of western politicians and diplomats as at the unscrupulous conniving of the Arab upper classes who use the miserable Arab masses for cannon fodder in their determination to stay in power and halt the march of progress at the gates of the Middle East.

John Roy Carlson's new book is part biographical. The reader is given the opportunity to study the author's background and understand the reasons which compelled this one-time newspaperman to devote most of his life to the exposure of forces which threaten the way of life he has so well assimilated. It is primarily his early training as a newspaperman to which he is chiefly indebted. Having sharpened his teeth, so to speak, on local events in the communities where he worked as a reporter, he later broadened the scope of his inquiry and with the thoroughness of the good reporter, applied his talents to expose first the Nazi and later the Communist threat to democracy.

"Cairo To Damascus" is a thrilling adventurous account of a reporter determined to witness his story unfold at first-hand and from all angles. It is also bold adventure. But what the author saw and how he managed to get to the scenes of the drama make this one of the most interesting first-hand chronicles of the struggle of the Jews to establish a homeland of their own as well as the forces which compelled and bitterly opposed its realization.

Commentaries

By Dr. Harry J. Stern, Rabbi

Thomas W. Jones — In Memoriam

A most distinguished Christian leader and friend of all mankind was summoned to his eternal reward on October 9th. Dr. Jones was our neighbour for over two decades. We often exchanged pulpits. He was a good neighbour and a consecrated colleague, sharing with us the work of building bridges of friendship between peoples of various nationalities, creeds, and groupings. Ever shall we remember his stirring address which he gave as Moderator of the United Church of Canada before the annual meeting of the Central Conference of American Rabbis here in Montreal in June, 1947. His prophetic utterance made a deep impression upon all assembled for the first session in our beloved Temple Emanu-El.

Public servants of the type of Dr. Jones do not spare their energy in giving of themselves, in the service of mankind. If he only had had the time, he would have served rich and poor alike, and we know that the demands often made on such men are most onerous, indeed. Throughout the English-speaking world, Thomas Jones was known for his selflessness, for his helpfulness, for his wit and humour and for his courage. His passing is a loss to the prophetic ministry, whether it be of Church or Synagogue. For the prophetic preacher utters the truth at all times and espouses principle amidst all conditions and circumstances. We are glad that such a noble soul came our way and that such a teacher of righteousness dwelt in our midst.

A week before Dr. Jones came to the end of life's journey on earth, we were privileged to step for but a moment in the room where he was battling with pain and physical decomposition since he was struck down by an incurable malady. But there he was possessed of all his mental vigor, meeting the challenges of life's battle to the end. I spoke to him a few words of comfort and words of gratitude in turn welled up from the depths of his heart. A few days before his passing to eternity, he wrote out the following message, broken off before it was really complete: "Tell the Church that I am going out with the flag of faith flying, flying higher than ever in my busy life here. I know now that what I have told others is true-God is love; and if the end comes today, His love, and the love of my family, friends, is ALL. Give my brethren my thanks; give..."

God bless and hallow the memory and the heritage of The Very Reverend Thomas W. Jones, is the prayer of his friend, a Rabbi in Israel.

Make Hebrew Your Second Language

BY S. J. GORDON, OF MONTREAL, NATIONAL PRESIDENT OF THE HEBREW CULTURE ORGANIZATION OF CANADA

We have seen the dream of generations come true in our time, the dream of the re-establishment of the Jewish State and the ingathering of the exiles. Jewish settlements which were established hundreds of years ago in the diaspora are now being liquidated—voluntarily, thank God—and entire communities are moving in from all corners of the earth to start life anew in Israel. What will unite these diverse elements and different cultures which comprise Israel today into a solidified entity? How can the Israelis achieve a truly complete nationhood? What is the spiritual force that will unite peoples who, up till now, lived in different cultures, spoke all kinds of languages, had all kinds of customs—who come now together in one land, under the Jewish flag, to build a new life? There can be only one answer: the Hebrew language and Hebrew culture.

The Hebrew language is the tie that joins Israel's past and present, and is the symbol of a united Jewish nation in the future. The fact that symbols of ancient glory re-appear on today's stamps and coins of Israel is not an accident, because rooted in our past—deeply rooted—was a vision, a prophecy that has come true. The Jewish tradition has remained intact because of the Hebrew language. The language was the vehicle and its protector; without Hebrew as a link, we would have something distorted and fragmentary.

The Hebrew language and culture are not only media of exchange in the State of Israel. It is the moral obligation of every Jew, young and old, to know the Hebrew language and further Hebrew culture. Hebrew culture can survive and grow in the galut only if we have the will and devotion to make it survive and grow. In order to renew that national link, and in order that we may draw from the genuine sources of our ancient and modern Hebrew culture, we must know the Hebrew language. We must draw from the authentic sources those rays of greatness in our literature past and present: the wisdom, the logic, the righteousness, the morality and the lyricism which are the glory of our people. Only by subjecting our children, our youth and our adults, to such influences can we expect to develop not only national pride, but an attachment and love for our heritage.

The Hebrew Culture Organization of Canada, Keren Hatarbut, feels that it is its solemn and pressing duty to call on every Jew in Canada to make Hebrew the second language in the home. At the World Hebrew Congress, Abba Eban advocated precisely this idea. Mr. Eban is an extremely able diplomat and certainly cannot be accused of thinking in unrealistic terms. He pointed out that we must demand of Jews all over the world that they adopt Hebrew as their second language. It is an idea which will probably not be accepted easily and immediately by the Jews of America, but no ideal is ever realized at once. It will take time, and the idea will become a reality! There is no finer example than Zionism itself. It began as a vision, a vision of men who had faith. It spread slowly, until it found complete expression in the reality of the State of Israel.

Keren Hatarbut, the national agency for the promotion of the Hebrew language and culture in Canada, has developed an extensive program of Hebraic activities. One important activity is the teaching of Hebrew to youth and adults. It is never too late to learn Hebrew. Those who wish to learn may enroll in one of the many courses that Keren Hatarbut offers. Hundreds of Jewish men and women learn to speak Hebrew every year in our classes. Everyone can do it if he so desires. It is not too difficult, and definitely possible.

The American philosopher, George Santayana, was once asked to comment on the words "difficult" and "impossible". He said: "The difficult is what can be done right away, and the impossible takes a little longer". So, for those who think that Hebrew as every Jew's second language sounds impossible, I say — "Let's get started!"

INTERNAL SECURITY AND INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS TODAY

in people and in the rightness of our democratic ideas that we can expose them to the glare of examination. The free expression of "admittedly unpopular ideas" often has enabled these ideas ultimately to remake our country.

We must be aware of the public relations problems which sometimes are posed for agencies in which controversial questions are studied and acted upon. Many safeguards are needed and they should be wisely employed by our agencies. All sides and points of view on a given problem should be presented—preferably at a single meeting—though when a particular aspect of a controversial question is considered, or a controversial speaker is presented at one session in a series of meetings, it should be made clear that this is part of a sequence in which all attitudes are aired.

Care must be taken to dissociate the agency sponsoring the program from any particular point of view expressed in such a discussion or from the statements of a particular speaker. There should be careful interpretation of the educational function performed by the agency in this process. Our agencies should be firm in their respect for democratic practices, and in maintaining a democratic spirit in their educational efforts at the same time that they use all necessary safeguards to insure adequate public understanding of their work.

The use of Jewish communal facilities and affiliation with Jewish communal bodies by Jewish organizations and groups is related to the question under discussion. The broadest principles of free association should be applied here. Adherence to the democratic spirit implies wide latitude at this point.

The following principles are related to the applications of this conception:

First, the Jewish community creates and maintains its agencies for the furtherance of democracy and Jewish life. In keeping with these purposes, the facilities and services of Jewish communal agencies should be available to all groups whose objectives are based upon a belief in the democratic system and the validity of Jewish survival.

Second, Jewish communal agencies should expect adherence to these broad principles by groups they serve, and require that the purposes of these groups be consistent with agency objectives.

Third, the democratic application of this policy is a challenging responsibility for Jewish agencies. It is simple to apply to the groups which clearly acknowledge and advocate a philosophy which is in contradiction to these objectives.

The complexities arise around groups which are charged with anti-democratic, un-American tenets, or with adherence to a philosophy which is contrary to the best interest of the Jewish people and its creative survival. There is no rule of thumb by which judgments can be made on the correctness of such claims. Each instance must be weighed on its merits.

Fourth, where the rights of a group to the use of Jewish communal services are challenged on this basis, its actions, writings, and affiliations should be carefully studied and a full and fair hearing provided. The blind use of labels or proscribed lists as criteria here is not a democratic practice. Though admittedly difficult to administer, judgments should be made instead on an appraisal of the compatibility of the principles and policies of groups, with the belief in democracy and Jewish survival which are the cornerstones of our Jewish agencies.

If the facts are clear and the conclusion is justly reached, the choice must be made courageously—whether it involves standing by the rights of the group to continue to receive service or the discontinuance of such service. Where there is reasonable doubt as to the final judgment, that decision is best which sustains the principles of freedom in the use of Jewish services.

Fifth, the responsibility for these practices rests with the Board of the Jewish communal agency involved. It is to be hoped that by virtue of representativeness, objectivity, and well-defined policies, it can carry out these principles wisely and in keeping with the agency's purposes. It is a part of the professional role of the worker to guide and counsel with the lay leadership of the agency in the most effective handling of all matters in this general area.

Several other criteria have relevance in determining the rights of groups to use Jewish communal services. For evident reason, it has long been well established that it is neither feasible nor advisable for the use of Jewish communal facilities to be extended to political parties or groups whose primary purpose is the advancement of a political party.

Our agencies are also warranted in requiring that participating groups abide by the agency rules and regulations defining the responsibilities of participants. Nor are groups justified in making use of their affiliation with Jewish communal agencies within the agency, in the Jewish community, or in the general community, to advance their own purposes either through direct action or through subtle efforts to associate their purposes with those of the agency or the Jewish community.

In our determination to find a balance in our agencies between the maintenance of individual rights and the preservation of internal security, we must safeguard against both infringement and abuse of these rights. It is normal function of agency administration under all circumstances to be regularly concerned with the proper execution of agency policy. Alertness is called for on the part of administrators to insure sound practice in this area.

We have already suggested that Jewish communal agencies with an educational purpose have an important responsibility for encouraging the highest type of civic consciousness, social understanding, and community participation. A major concern in their programs today should be education on the citizens' responsibility for the maintenance of a sound balance between individual rights and internal security.

Our communal services can increase citizen recognition of the need for adequate protection of civil liberties against threats from any point, and the areas in which citizens can act intelligently to preserve our liberties. This is an important task for our agencies functioning in educational areas. It is vital that our programs enable individuals and groups to act soundly and effectively in this regard.

We mention only in passing here, time precluding full treatment of the subject, the importance in agencies such as Jewish Community Centers, of protecting the fullest opportunity for groups to take social action in their own name, providing they make amply clear that in so acting they do not represent the agency. Though acknowledgedly difficult to apply, this principle is nonetheless important.

Related to the problem under discussion is the social action role of Jewish communal services. Agency boards are frequently asked to adopt resolutions and engage in other forms of action dealing with social issues. Every organization must establish for itself an intelligent definition of the area of community action appropriate to it. Such a clarification is needed under normal circumstances and is especially important in a critical period like the present.

It should be borne in mind that the primary purposes of Jewish communal services are to serve the Jewish community in accordance with their particular function. Social action by Jewish agencies should be taken in those areas which have clear and direct relevance to the agency's purposes and in which there is unmistakable competence to act on the part of the agency.

Professional workers should aid lay leaders in formulating the areas of action appropriate to the agency, in order that agency practice in this respect can derive from well-defined policies, rather than expediency.

Just as Jewish communal services are affected by the search for balance between internal security and individual rights, their professional staff have been caught in the eddies of these currents. In the past year many problems have been encountered in this connection by Jewish communal workers. In some agencies, a political test for obtaining or retaining employment has emerged. There have been instances of agencies terminating the tenure of staff members on the basis of their political views, activity, or affiliation.

In other situations, the right of workers to be recognized through a particular union has been challenged on the basis of the political orientation of its leadership and its affiliation. Suggested limitations on the areas of freedom with which Jewish communal workers can act as citizens have been raised by others.

The issues have been sharpened by some of the related problems posed. The threat of bad public relations for the Jewish community and its communal services has been pointed to as a consequence of the employment of workers holding particular viewpoints or affiliations. Question has been raised as to the competence of such workers for the proper discharge of Jewish communal agency functions. There has been concern in some agencies about the possibility of workers misusing their relationships with clients or agency groups for political or protective purposes.

These challenging problems call for clear thinking and adequate definition. It is important at once to observe that a worker's acceptance of professional employment in a Jewish communal agency must carry with it conviction on his part the validity of democratic values and Jewish survival, the foundation upon which Jewish communal services are erected.

The practice of social work in the Jewish community with integrity and according to the best professional standards requires unqualified affirmation of the tenets of democracy. It necessitates a clear commitment to maintaining the integrity of the Jewish people through creative Jewish living.

Jewish communal agencies should, through their interviews with prospective staff, satisfy themselves that these professional qualifications, among many others, are present. In the normal course of the agency's operation, adherence to these principles as reflected in the worker's performance on the job should be an integral part of regular staff evaluations.

These are not practices unique to this moment, but are standard approaches to determining competence which should be professionally applied to all aspects of a worker's capacities. Judgments involved in these processes must be based on intrinsic ideas, values and performance, not on labels.

It is true that such a principle is not simple to administer, but tackling it in this fashion is not too much to expect in view of the high stakes involved. Agencies should staunchly and courageously act upon the recommendation of such evaluations soundly arrived at.

In the delicate balance between individual liberty and internal security, there are rights and obligations for the Jewish communal worker. Viewed in light of the foregoing professional qualifications, these may be stated as follows:

First, there is the right of workers to hold social and political attitudes and convictions, to freely express these beliefs, and to maintain such organizational affiliations as their consciences may dictate, providing that their exercise of these rights does not, beyond all reasonable doubt, prevent the satisfactory discharge of their professional responsibilities.

Second, there is the sacred professional principle that only factors relating to the worker's fulfillment of his professional responsibilities are germane to the judgment of the worker's competence. Considerations of political attitude and affiliation not clearly related to the proper discharge of his professional functions are not relevant to his evaluation.

As in all democratic situations, such rights carry with them concomitant responsibilities. These obligations of Jewish communal workers arise not alone out of considerations affecting internal security, but are also basic to the sustaining of professional work standards.

The obligations are as follows: First, there must be realistic recognition that membership on the staff of a Jewish communal agency, especially on the administrative and executive level, carries with it an association in the public mind between the worker, his agency, and the community. Try as he may to separate them, his very effectiveness as a Jewish communal worker creates this identification. The public image of this connection persists around the clock and is no respecter of hours of work.

It is, therefore, most difficult for the worker to distinguish between his function in the community as an individual citizen and as a representative of the agency. This reality must be frankly considered and studied for its specific implications. It is impossible to establish an absolute formula which automatically guides all workers in such situations. Within the broad concept of the fullest exercise of his rights to act as a citizen, each communal worker must decide for himself how this principle applies to him.

Second, when the Jewish communal worker acts as an individual, he has an obligation clearly to distinguish his actions from those which he may on other occasions take as an agency representative.

Third, Jewish communal workers must be guided by faithful adherence to the ethics of their profession. Among other principles this includes the avoidance of imposition—conscious or implied—of a particular viewpoint upon clients, agency members of groups. The professional relationship which obtains between the worker and those who are served by the agency must never be violated through misuse for political or any other personal objective.

We have a continuing concern as professionals with safeguarding the broadest opportunities for Jewish communal workers to act individually as citizens of the community.

The problems with which this discussion is concerned are indeed complex. Yet they lie at the very heart of our work. In these days of growing limitations on individual rights, we must strive constantly to thrust back the horizons of restriction. We must maintain and extend the frontiers of individual rights. In this spirit, we must fearlessly chart a path for carrying out the community trust of our agencies and fulfilling their democratic and Jewish goals in accordance with sound professional principles and practice. If as humans we must err as we deal with particular situations, let our error be on the side of freedom. May we successfully summon the faith, wisdom, courage, and skill to deal with these difficult problems in a manner which is consistent with our fundamental commitments as social workers in the service of the community!
